Jen Alexander is a Program Associate in The Graduate School and a Lecturer in English Language Programs. Her area of linguistic expertise is articulatory and acoustic phonetics, with a focus on perception and production of North American English and lexical tone (e.g., Chinese). She is the primary instructor for Integrated Academic Skills and also works with students one-on-one in our LING 482 individual instruction services and our LING 483 supported online software training course.

Jennifer Alexander, PhD

LING 482 TUTOR INFORMATION
SPRING QUARTER 2022

Autumn D. Bryant is a Speech-Language Pathologist in English Language Programs. She has a BA in Sociology from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, an MA in Speech and Hearing Science from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and an MS in Health Communication from Northwestern University. She leads our LING 482 individual instruction program, offers interactive pronunciation workshops, and oversees development of our Attune® auditory discrimination software. She is also able to support English language learners who may have an existing or undiagnosed speech disorder.

Autumn Bryant, MS, MA, CCC-SLP

Shawn Foster is a fourth year PhD student in the linguistics program. His interests are in sociolinguistics, phonology, prosody, and language change. Much of his work focuses on how speakers of a language learn and make use of their language's sound system. He has previously served as teaching assistant for classes in phonetics, sociolinguistics, and semantics. He has experience learning Spanish, Arabic, and Russian from his undergraduate studies. This will be his second official year working with the English Language Program.

Shawn Foster

Anna is an affiliate instructor in English Language Programs. She recently completed a master's degree in Linguistics at Northwestern, where her interests included rhythm and intonation in speech perception and production as well as interactions between language and music. While working towards her bachelor's degree at the University of Oregon she completed the Second Language Acquisition Teaching (SLAT) certification and was a tutor and conversation partner for two years at the University’s American English Institute. She enjoys outdoor activities such as hiking and rock climbing, playing piano, and acquiring as many plants as possible.

Anna Robinson, MA

Thomas Sostarics is a third year PhD student in the Linguistics department. His research interests include prosody, pragmatics, and sociolinguistics. While working towards her bachelor's degree at the College of William and Mary, she served as a TA for Italian 101 language courses, and she has previously served as a teaching assistant at Northwestern University for classes in sociolinguistics and semantics. Outside of linguistics, Kate enjoys running, reading, and exploring the city.

Kate Sandberg

Thomas Sostarics

Anna

Kate Sandberg

Thomas Sostarics

Shawn Foster

Autumn Bryant

Jen Alexander

Skills/Specialties:

Autumn Bryant, MS, MA, CCC-SLP

About Autumn:

Autumn Bryant is a Speech-Language Pathologist in English Language Programs. She has a BA in Sociology from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, an MA in Speech and Hearing Science from the University of Illinois at Urbana-Champaign, and an MS in Health Communication from Northwestern University. She leads our LING 482 individual instruction program, offers interactive pronunciation workshops, and oversees development of our Attune® auditory discrimination software. She is also able to support English language learners who may have an existing or undiagnosed speech disorder.

Autumn Bryant, MS, MA, CCC-SLP

Shawn Foster is a fourth year PhD student in the linguistics program. His interests are in sociolinguistics, phonology, prosody, and language change. Much of his work focuses on how speakers of a language learn and make use of their language's sound system. He has previously served as teaching assistant for classes in phonetics, sociolinguistics, and semantics. He has experience learning Spanish, Arabic, and Russian from his undergraduate studies. This will be his second official year working with the English Language Program.

Shawn Foster

Anna is an affiliate instructor in English Language Programs. She recently completed a master's degree in Linguistics at Northwestern, where her interests included rhythm and intonation in speech perception and production as well as interactions between language and music. While working towards her bachelor's degree at the University of Oregon she completed the Second Language Acquisition Teaching (SLAT) certification and was a tutor and conversation partner for two years at the University’s American English Institute. She enjoys outdoor activities such as hiking and rock climbing, playing piano, and acquiring as many plants as possible.

Anna Robinson, MA

Kate Sandberg

Thomas Sostarics

About Thomas:

Thomas Sostarics is a third year PhD student in the Linguistics department. His research interests include prosody, pragmatics, and sociolinguistics. He has served as a teaching assistant for undergraduate classes in phonology and programming at Northwestern. He is able to support English language learners looking to practice speaking in English.

Thomas Sostarics

Jen Alexander is a Program Associate in The Graduate School and a Lecturer in English Language Programs. Her area of linguistic expertise is articulatory and acoustic phonetics, with a focus on perception and production of North American English and lexical tone (e.g., Chinese). She is the primary instructor for Integrated Academic Skills and also works with students one-on-one in our LING 482 individual instruction services and our LING 483 supported online software training course.

Jen Alexander

Skills/Specialties:

Jen Alexander

About Jen:

Jen Alexander is a Program Associate in The Graduate School and a Lecturer in English Language Programs. Her area of linguistic expertise is articulatory and acoustic phonetics, with a focus on perception and production of North American English and lexical tone (e.g., Chinese). She is the primary instructor for Integrated Academic Skills and also works with students one-on-one in our LING 482 individual instruction services and our LING 483 supported online software training course.

Jen Alexander

Skills/Specialties: